

Commercial Truck Accidents

Trucking accidents have an increased chance of injury occurring because during a trucking accident, a truck is unable to remain upright. Truck drivers do not have the same visibility and quick reaction maneuverability that smaller vehicles have, which contributes to trucking accidents. If you have been involved in a trucking accident, contact us to confer with a trucking accident attorney.

There are safety regulations that are intended to help prevent trucking accidents from occurring; however, violations of safety recommendations greatly increase the risk of trucking accidents. Truck drivers must assume responsibility to take all measures to avoid trucking accidents and putting other drivers on the road in risk of becoming injured because of a trucking accident. Due to the large size of trucks, a trucking accident can greatly endanger the lives of other smaller vehicles unnecessarily when truck operators fail to consider proper trucking accident prevention.

If involved in a trucking accident, file a report to have documentation of the trucking accident occurring and obtain all necessary information. Avoid discussing the events of the trucking accident because anything said or documented can later be used against you. Contact a trucking accident attorney to learn your legal rights and options. A trucking accident attorney can help you recover the damages you are entitled to.